Why I Built This Lesson

Temidayo Afonja - Organizational capability strategist. Founder, The Density Group. Author, The Capability Audit.

For nearly two decades, I worked inside enterprise rooms where performance, promotion, capability, and organizational change were assessed. Experience across PwC, Deloitte, EY, and enterprise leadership.

In 2026, the question became personal.

“My performance had shaped my standing. It had not insulated the role from a change in

“Can a career begin to stall while the person is still performing well?”

What You'll Leave With Today

1

SPOT THE PATTERN

Recognize which of three career-stall patterns may deserve attention in your work.

2

TEST IT AGAINST RECENT WORK

Use one example from your last 90 days rather than a plan, title, promise, or feeling.

3

NAME THE NEXT QUESTION

Identify what deserves a closer reading before a larger career move.

THE CENTRAL INSIGHT

A Role Can Reward You Long After It Stops Building You

Strong performance may tell you that you are delivering value.

It does not, by itself, tell you whether the work is still:

- Expanding your judgment
- Exposing you to unfamiliar problems
- Building capability that travels
- Increasing your future options

Performance matters. It is not the whole picture.

SIGN 1

You Are Repeating, Not Stretching

You may be performing at a high level, but the work is no longer asking you to solve meaningfully unfamiliar problems.

THE TEST

What problem have you solved in the last 90 days that you genuinely did not already know how to solve?

QUICK CHECK - live in the chat or in your own note

In one word, is your recent work stretching, repeating, or unclear?

SIGN 2

You Are Indispensable, but Mainly Here

The organization relies on you, but your value may be increasingly tied to its systems, internal language, relationships, processes, or history.

THE TEST

Could someone outside your company explain your value without using your title or internal company language?

QUICK CHECK

Which has grown fastest: internal dependence, external visibility, or both?

SIGN 3

Your Responsibility Is Growing Faster Than Your Capability

Your title, scope, and expectations may be increasing while the range of judgment, unfamiliar problems, or transferable capability being formed in you is narrowing.

THE TEST

What capability do you have now that you did not have before your responsibilities increased?

QUICK CHECK

Which has grown faster: responsibility, learning, or visibility?

Five quiet minutes.

Use a notebook, notes app, or the Career Stall Check if you already have it.

1

Which sign is most present for me?

Repeating instead of stretching, indispensable but mainly here, or responsibility growing faster than capability.

2

What is one example from the last 90 days?

Use a lived example, not a plan, promise, title, or feeling.

3

What capability, learning, or future option may not be growing?

Name the specific thing, not a general sense that something is off.

4

What is the next question I need to investigate?

The question you would need to read more carefully before making a bigger career decision.

A recognition exercise is not a result.

- If one sign felt familiar, that does not mean you should leave.
 - If none felt familiar, that does not mean your role is still building you.
 - RECOGNITION TELLS YOU: what may deserve examination.
 - ASSESSMENT TELLS YOU: what your evidence can support more defensibly.

As routine output becomes easier to reproduce, the distinction between familiar performance and growing judgment becomes more consequential.

The Risk of an Uncalibrated Decision

Leaving prematurely

Costs months of accumulated equity, internal network capital, and operational momentum.

Staying in a static role

Quietly degrades your external market value and limits your future options.

Read the position before you absorb the risk.

That reading is the Capability Position Read.

Today helped you spot the pattern. September 16 helps you read the position.

TODAY: RECOGNITION

Name one pattern you can see.

Point to one recent example.

Identify one question worth investigating.

SEPTEMBER 16: GUIDED READ

Complete an initial and evidence-backed reading.

Record a provisional position, boundary or incomplete reading.

Choose one category of move worth testing.

Write your Next-Move Note.

September 2 opens the question. September 16 guides the read.

Neither route is required. September 16 is free; the Field Kit is optional and private.

Ten minutes for questions.

Questions about the ideas are welcome. Individual situations will not be scored or diagnosed in this room.

- 1 Good questions to explore
How do I tell the difference between performance and formation? What does portability mean? What kind of evidence counts?
- 2 Questions to redirect
Should I leave? What state am I in? What should I do about my manager? Can you score my situation?
- 3 Boundary line
I can help you clarify what the pattern suggests examining. I cannot make the employment decision for you.
